Not many. You can see some of the students at the end start appreciating math, but i feel I am torturing the majority of them.

It is too much material covered to fast and too shallowly for the student to reach an understanding. In most of the cases I am just training them to pass the exam. The students lack the sufficient background since the early stages. I have been asked to slow down when I was manipulating fractions and algebraic expression. This is Matte 2 material, these students should have passed Matte 3. On of the main prblem is that in the best case scenario they have studied math last 2 years ago, and they forgot everything.

Same as every year. Also, 13 students replied to the evaluations I graded 59 exam and failed more or less 13 students and awarded the same number of A. If we want to have student evaluation that tell us something we should find a way to make students answer them.
